Itterazzino

My welcome

A mock home restaurant on my rooftop — a true journey into my approach to creative strategy.

I chose the culinary world because every project, like every dish, starts from a precise mix of ingredients, technique, insight, and cultural context. And as with any memorable dining experience, this journey unfolds in three courses, each inspired by a city that shaped me—Mazara del Vallo, Milan, Rome—and by a defining project in my career.

From the fresh, vegan pop of Goovi to the modular elegance of Bvlgari Hotels & Resorts, and the bold campaign for ALIA, each course represents a different strategic lens: social, brand, and creative. What may look like play is, in fact, my way of conveying complexity with clarity, analysis with poetry, and vision with flavor.

Social strategy

The ingredients for a balanced strategy

Every element is designed to nourish the community, shaping a social strategy with a consistent and positive flavor.

For Goovi, the social strategy was built like a well-composed bowl — each content type and channel was carefully mapped and symbolically represented by an ingredient.

Each component serves a strategic purpose:

edamame for organic engagement,
mango for the brand's tone of voice,
quinoa as media planning,
purple cabbage for visual storytelling,
and chia seeds for the paid media layer.

A strategy designed to nourish the community while staying consistent, recognizable, and scalable.

Brand strategy

Translating luxury into a global ecosystem

Defining the brand positioning for Bvlgari Hotels & Resorts required a structured yet adaptive approach — one that could translate Bvlgari's distinctive identity into a cohesive and scalable system for the luxury hospitality sector.

The goal: to craft a brand experience that is relevant, recognizable, and consistent throughout the customer journey, across global touchpoints and local expressions.

Starting from a semantic brand analysis and a competitive mapping of the hospitality landscape, we developed a cross-category identity framework that captured Bvlgari's core codes — excellence, heritage, and iconicity — and embedded them in a narrative and visual language tailored to the luxury context.

The project included the definition of the content architecture as well as stylistic and tonal guidelines.

In collaboration with UX/UI teams and Isobar London, we designed a modular, immersive digital experience — a platform capable of enhancing the strength of the master brand while celebrating the uniqueness of each individual property.

The strategy also introduced an editorial governance system for content localization, built on continuous dialogue with the general managers of each hotel worldwide.

BVLGARI

Founded in 1884, Bvlgari is a symbol of Roman excellence in jewelry, blending masterful craftsmanship with bold aesthetics. The brand stands out for its ability to reinterpret tradition through a contemporary lens, giving life to iconic creations that celebrate beauty and innovation.

HOTELS & RESORTS

Over time, Bvlgari extended its vision into the world of luxury hospitality with the creation of Bvlgari Hotels & Resorts.

This evolution translates the brand's core values — timeless elegance, attention to detail, and immersive sensory experience — into the hospitality context.

Each property reflects the essence of Bvlgari, offering a distinctive experience that combines refined design, impeccable service, and a deep connection to local culture.

Global identity, local soul

Each destination translates the brand's promise through local codes — preserving a recognizable and consistent positioning. A visual and narrative language that adapts without losing its essence.

The expansion of Bvlgari Hotels & Resorts into major cities and exotic destinations demonstrates the brand's ability to remain true to its identity while embracing local contexts.

Each property embodies the Bvlgari spirit through distinctive design and personalized service, seamlessly integrating cultural elements and local traditions. The Bvlgari Resort Dubai blends Middle Eastern opulence with Italian elegance, while the Bvlgari Hotel Paris captures Parisian sophistication through refined interiors and meticulous attention to detail.

These local expressions enrich the guest experience and reinforce the brand's global presence.

Creative strategy

The raw material of change

The project began with a public tender launched by Alia in collaboration with ANCI and CONAI, aiming to raise citizen awareness around proper packaging disposal and the importance of the recycling supply chain.

The strategic challenge lay in crafting a communication approach that could inspire awareness and drive behavioral change — on a topic with high technical complexity and limited narrative appeal.

In this context, constraints became creative leverage: we transformed a highly technical brief into a content system that was coherent, accessible, and memorable — capable of engaging a broad, diverse, and geographically dispersed audience.

The project required a fine balance between education and engagement, combining informational rigor with a light, creative touch.

To respond to the brief, we activated a structured four-phase process:

- Analysis & Insights

A deep dive into the regulatory and communication landscape around packaging and recycling. We analyzed disposal habits, cultural barriers, and common perceptions. Key insights were mapped to transform a technical message into a simple, relatable narrative.

- Creative strategy & Concept

We developed a modular concept based on the idea of giving packaging a “second life”: every correct action can generate new value. The tone was positive and constructive — aligned with the brand’s public identity and focused on education without blame.

- Content system & Activation

We produced digital assets and print materials for multichannel campaigns, designed to ensure visual clarity, strong brand recognition, and adaptability. The concept was tailored across different target groups and touchpoints, maintaining coherence and maximizing impact.

- Localization & Stakeholder engagement

We coordinated with participating municipalities and supported the localization of all campaign materials. Training sessions and community engagement moments were activated, turning the campaign into a true opportunity for dialogue with local stakeholders.

La sorpresa è l'ingrediente principale

The strategic insight uncovered a blind spot in public perception: the virtuous transformation of waste is invisible — and what can't be seen, rarely gets valued.

From this came the creative idea: presenting deliberately provocative statements to trigger a cognitive short-circuit, immediately resolved by a footnote that flips the meaning and reveals the true message.

The concept unfolds on two complementary levels:

- Linguistic: bold, polarizing copy designed to create dissonance and grab instant attention.
- Visual: a split-screen format that shows the "before and after" of waste — visualizing its transformation into a useful, tangible, and sustainable object.

Each campaign subject is adapted to its environmental context, supported by a color system inspired by local waste disposal bins.

The informative content is seamlessly embedded within a high-impact narrative structure, designed to raise awareness and improve the quality of people's actions.

The Fruit Salad

The final course in this journey is a fresh, well-balanced fruit salad: a synthesis of the most meaningful strategic and creative projects I've contributed to in recent years. From the UX content strategy for Chicco's e-commerce, designed to guide new parents through every stage of the shopping experience, to the redefinition of Enel X Way's tone of voice, making it both sustainable and aspirational. Along the way, I've also supported Mellin on branded content and social campaigns, and worked on projects across tech, healthcare, electric mobility, and emerging technologies.

Meet the Chef

In this presentation, I've played the role of the chef —but it's outside the kitchen that I truly come alive. I love to draw, paint with acrylics and watercolors, and publish self-produced comics that speak (almost) only to those who take the time to leaf through them.

I write, take photographs, shoot scrappy short films with friends, and I've been playing the guitar since I was eight. Over time, I've also taught myself — always by ear — to play the piano and other instruments. Music, for me, is a narrative tool, just like theatre and cinema — two worlds I've always watched, followed, and studied closely.

My home in Rome is my Fortress of Solitude, like Superman's — but in an instant, it can become a bustling harbor full of friends and familiar strangers. Here, between shelves of graphic novels and vintage prints, I host dinners under the stars with guests, wanderers, and the simply curious. Where creativity meets real life, and every dish — like every project — is just an excuse to tell a story.

Thank you.
